

Abstract

Abstract goes here. In this paper, we propose a simplified and efficient method for the detection of bearing faults in asynchronous electrical machines based on the monitoring of the currents. This method is based on second and higher order statistics. This approach is validated on synthetic and real data; the obtained results show that the method discriminate efficiently between healthy and faulty machines