Abstract :

The existence of complex potentials with real eigenvalues rises two questions. The first one concerns the determination of the local real equivalent potentials.
The second one underlines the fact that any even potential with respect to x in the one-dimensional (D = 1) space has at least two complex partners with the same spectrum. The present paper illustrates this situation with a few examples.