

An approach to the development of a system of vector control for an asynchronous electric drive adapting to variations of rotor resistance is considered. The approach is based on the "linearizing feedback" method implemented by means of a self-training neural network with calculations of the rotor's resistance and flux